

REJOICE!

Writers' guidelines for "Divine Touch" stories and poetry

Each issue of Rejoice! carries two personal faith stories under the banner "Divine Touch," and two or three poems. Freelance submissions are welcomed, so long as they follow the guidelines below.

Each story must

- be no more than 600 words in length;
- be written in the first person ("as told to" stories are also acceptable);
- show how God has acted in the writer's or teller's life in a particular experience of conversion or a spiritual awakening, healing or reconciliation, or call to a special task or mission;
- be infused with an excitement about God's work in the world and in one's life;
- reflect, as much as possible, Anabaptist themes of community, Christian discipleship, and peace/justice/reconciliation;
- be accessible to a range of ages, educational levels, and ethnic backgrounds, with lots of detail, human interest color, and quotes;
- reflect the style and tone of the devotional writing that makes up the bulk of the magazine.

Poems must

- be no more than 28 lines
- not contain pious or sentimental cliches
- be consistent with the goals of devotional literature; i.e., point people to God and to faithful living for God
- be rich in images, metaphors, and inspirational thought
- And they don't have to rhyme. . . .

Keep in mind the Rejoice! audience

- More than 12,000 readers in Canada and the United States;
- Mostly members of the Mennonite and Mennonite Brethren churches;
- Men and women of a wide variety of cultural backgrounds, levels of education, economic circumstances, and theological and biblical understandings.

Terms and rights. Remuneration is modest—approximately 8 cents (US) per word, payable upon publication. Rejoice! buys first serial rights, plus the right to reprint or quote from the article or poem in other Faith & Life or Kindred Productions publications or web sites.
